

In the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina, we need to continue focusing on aid and relief for victims:

- Victims of Hurricane Katrina in Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama have lost loved ones, friends, neighbors, as well as their homes, businesses and belongings. They will continue to face many challenges as they begin to rebuild their lives.
- Preparation and response to Hurricane Katrina was not adequate, however there will be plenty of time for critical assessments after immediate aid and relief are completed.
- This is not a time for partisan finger-pointing. Republicans and Democrats need to work as partners in the recovery and reconstruction process.

America has responded to those in need:

- The outpouring of support for those who have opened their homes, wallets and hearts for those affected shows unwavering generosity. Charitable donations total over $762 million. The American Red Cross has raised $584 million in gifts and pledges.

In the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina, we need to continue focusing on aid and relief for victims:

- Victims of Hurricane Katrina in Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama have lost loved ones, friends, neighbors, as well as their homes, businesses and belongings. They will continue to face many challenges as they begin to rebuild their lives.
- Preparation and response to Hurricane Katrina was not adequate, however there will be plenty of time for critical assessments after immediate aid and relief are completed.
- This is not a time for partisan finger-pointing. Republicans and Democrats need to work as partners in the recovery and reconstruction process.

America has responded to those in need:

- The outpouring of support for those who have opened their homes, wallets and hearts for those affected shows unwavering generosity. Charitable donations total over $762 million. The American Red Cross has raised $584 million in gifts and pledges.

In the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina, we need to continue focusing on aid and relief for victims:

- Victims of Hurricane Katrina in Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama have lost loved ones, friends, neighbors, as well as their homes, businesses and belongings. They will continue to face many challenges as they begin to rebuild their lives.
- Preparation and response to Hurricane Katrina was not adequate, however there will be plenty of time for critical assessments after immediate aid and relief are completed.
- This is not a time for partisan finger-pointing. Republicans and Democrats need to work as partners in the recovery and reconstruction process.

America has responded to those in need:

- The outpouring of support for those who have opened their homes, wallets and hearts for those affected shows unwavering generosity. Charitable donations total over $762 million. The American Red Cross has raised $584 million in gifts and pledges.

-
- Hundreds of millions of dollars in cash, basic need items and supplies have been donated by large and small businesses across the country.
  - Congress responded in a prompt and bipartisan manner to pass two supplemental funding requests, totaling over $62 billion.

Republicans in the Senate will continue to assist impacted communities on the road to recovery in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina:

- We will honor and remember the many who lost their lives while trying to save their own lives and those of others on the National Day of Prayer and Remembrance Service on Friday, September 16.
- As we move forward, Senate Republicans are committed to prioritizing the need for additional relief that extend beyond immediate basic needs.
- We need to focus on recovery and rebuilding through a coordinated and comprehensive plan to help the Gulf Coast region.

-
- Hundreds of millions of dollars in cash, basic need items and supplies have been donated by large and small businesses across the country.
  - Congress responded in a prompt and bipartisan manner to pass two supplemental funding requests, totaling over $62 billion.

Republicans in the Senate will continue to assist impacted communities on the road to recovery in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina:

- We will honor and remember the many who lost their lives while trying to save their own lives and those of others on the National Day of Prayer and Remembrance Service on Friday, September 16.
- As we move forward, Senate Republicans are committed to prioritizing the need for additional relief that extend beyond immediate basic needs.
- We need to focus on recovery and rebuilding through a coordinated and comprehensive plan to help the Gulf Coast region.

-
- Hundreds of millions of dollars in cash, basic need items and supplies have been donated by large and small businesses across the country.
  - Congress responded in a prompt and bipartisan manner to pass two supplemental funding requests, totaling over $62 billion.

Republicans in the Senate will continue to assist impacted communities on the road to recovery in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina:

- We will honor and remember the many who lost their lives while trying to save their own lives and those of others on the National Day of Prayer and Remembrance Service on Friday, September 16.
- As we move forward, Senate Republicans are committed to prioritizing the need for additional relief that extend beyond immediate basic needs.
- We need to focus on recovery and rebuilding through a coordinated and comprehensive plan to help the Gulf Coast region.

